VOTES FOR WOMEN IN BRITAIN NEAR, ASQUITH HINTS

Premier Intimates Suffrage Will Have to Be Considered Soon

London, Aug. 18.—Premier Asquith intimated in the House of Commons that women will soon be allowed to vote in Britain. The premier declared the women deserved a "perfectly unimportant vote." The estimation came as the premier introduced a bill asking for the first reading to extend the franchise to present parliament for eight months or until the end of next May.

Delay on Franchise

When the premier made his announcement on August 1 that he would introduce the bill, he said that he intended at the same time to announce the government's proposals regarding registration.

Today, however, Mr. Asquith said it was not the purpose of the government to ask parliament at this time to take up alteration of the qualifications for the franchise.

He said that the undertaking of new franchise and registration reforms in the midst of a great war was too complex and controversial a problem.

At a time, said the premier, when the war had reached a happy, peaceful stage and when it more than ever required the absolute concurrence of the government, it was impossible to consider the larger questions involved in a revision of the franchise.

I am in a suggestion that the franchise would be extended to all soldiers and munitions workers. Mr. Asquith said there were the grave difficulties in the way and that there were serious objections from a military viewpoint to holding a general election among the troops in the field, he added.

"General enfranchisement has been brought face to face with another problem. What are we going to do with women?"

He was bound to say the premier went on, that representatives of the women had presented to him a perfectly unimportant case. They were content to abide by the present franchise but would argue their claims if no qualifications for the franchise were altered.

A separate bill bringing into force a new register on the basis of present qualifications on May 21, 1917, will be introduced in the House tomorrow.

There is no doubt that one of the main reasons for the government's avoidance of the franchise problem was the threat of the women that they would refuse to recognize any change in the franchise in favor of holding men which failed at the same time to recognize women's rights to the franchise.
